The Centre for Autism Services Alberta's visual art programs for children, teens, and young adults allow aspiring artists on the Autism Spectrum to bring their ideas to life through a variety of media. Led by instructors from the Nina Haggerty Centre for the Arts, our artists develop skills in drawing, painting, and ceramics, and explore digital media and animation.

In Bloom features artwork from our talented program participants:

Just like new buds on plants and trees in spring, our artists are opening to new creative ideas, stretching up to discover and greet new interests and talents. They are In Bloom. In interacting with their art and with other artists, our participants become more confident in themselves and their abilities. As the artists develop relationships with their creativity and with each other, our community grows together to encourage the artists in bloom. This increases social awareness and acceptance, and the community becomes more inclusive, helping to nurture these budding artists as they grow. The seasons show us the extraordinary and creative wonders of nature. In Bloom shows us the extraordinary and creative wonders that are possible when our community comes together to support diversity.
